

LONDRINA

Located in the northern region of Paraná, Londrina is the second biggest city of the state with more than 500,000 inhabitants. The city is considered an important regional development center in the agribusiness, commercial and healthcare areas. Londrina is also known for the great quality of life and their important higher education institutions - UTFPR, UEL, UNOPAR.

The campus was founded in 2007. Back then – with only one undergraduate major and a limited number of faculty and staff – the campus began its operation in an improvised facility donated by the municipal government.

Almost three years later, between the second semester of 2009 and the beginning of 2010, the campus moved to the current and permanent location. Nowadays, more than five years later, the Federal University of Technology – Paraná – Campus Londrina, counts with 146 professors, 65 staff and more than 1,350 students divided into 6 undergraduate majors and 4 masters programs.
